NUMBER 25 ADDISON AND WOODHULL, STEUBEN COUNTY, N. Y., THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1938 VOLUME IX

George A. King Addresses Group Steuben County Justices of Peace

District Attorney lauds justices for their unselfish devotion to duty at meeting held in Addison last Wednesday — Opposes idea of abolishing office for an appointive judge covering a district court.

Dist. Attorney George A. King lauded a large group of Steuben County justices last Wednesday evening for their unselfish service.

The meeting held in the Chapel of the Redeemer, Addison, was one of the get-together groups in which justices of the peace in this county are gaining more knowledge of the many duties of their office. There were 51 justices and guests present representing 21 towns in the county.

Adopt Constitution

The meeting was presided over by J. P. Percy Payne of Painted Post. Justice Gay of Bath read the constitution and by-laws drawn for the newly formed organization and these were adopted as read.

The following executive committee was appointed: Justices Gay of Bath, Leete of Addison, Jackson of Cameron, Meade of Wayland Swartwood of Urbana, Paddock of Prattsburg, Helmer of Fremont, Walton of Bradford, Bundy of Howard and McTamney of Tuscarora. Justice Brownley of Bath gave a report on the State Constitutional Convention, and a resolution was passed opposing the proposed amendment abolishing or limiting the powers of justices of the peace.

Following the talk by the district attorney a series of round-table discussions were held. Attorneys Crane, Salerno and Varn of Addison, Brownley of Bath and Mr. King talking informally to small groups and answering questions concerning problems which confront individual justices in the course of their work. These conferences have been found exceedingly helpful for the justices in solving complex matters that come before them.

District Attorney Speaks

Mr. King stated that it was both a pleasure and an honor to address such a group. "People generally do not realize the unselfish service rendered throughout the state by justices of the peace to the public in general," he said "People are interested in what they receive—the benefits they derive from a group like this. It is proper that an organization like this meet often for the unselfish reasons that bring you here.

"A group of paid judges might decide not to continue work if their income was taken away. Quite likely a group of lawyers would quit work, if their paying business was taken away. But you men are acting, in the interest of humanity, you are serving well and all you get in return is a mere pittance. You as Chief Justice Charles Hughes has said, 'deserve the undying gratitude of the people of the republic.'

A Court of Justice

"How important is this court? Are the attacks launched against it justified? It is important because it is a court to which a man can come and get justice. You have a human understanding of the problems of the people who come before you, and an intimate knowledge of the background of these problems. We hear about the central government in Washington taking over administration of justice, first from Washington and then from Albany. But we know local problems cannot be decided as well from a central government as they can by local people who are at the scene. It seems that the public owes you a debt of grattitude for showing the interest you have in attending this meeting, and you should make it plain you are against wiping out this system of giving justice locally.

"It doesn't make so much difference when two litigants engage in a lawsuit in your court which one of them wins. The amount involved is usually so small that it doesn't hurt either of them very much anyway, if justice has been done. If a man goes out of justice court feeling he has had a fair trial, that justice has been done—that is the important thing. He can forget the cost, if his feelings are soothed by the belief he has had justice. How could that be done by dividing the county in four parts or making a man go way over to Bath to appear before some man sent in from Washington? The local justice knows the

Kidnap Suspect Absolved at Niagara Falls

A man named William J. Snyder who gave his home address as Addison, N. Y., was picked up on a vagrancy charge in Niagara Falls Monday. A sheaf of kidnap clippings and a slight resemblance to the missing slayer led police to think he might be connected with the unsolved Mattson case on the Pacific coast. Snyder stated he was an Addison boy whose parents took him to California; that he returned here three years ago and worked for James Scott for a time on a dairy farm.

Mr. Scott was the tenant on Judge Edwin C. Smith's farm near this village up to this spring of 1938 when he removed to Howard, Pa. His wife happened to be visiting in Elmira Tuesday and was contacted by a newspaper man. She stated she barely remembered Mr. Snyder who could only have worked for Mr. Scott a few days.

Tuesday night police authorities announced they attached no importance to Snyder's carrying kidnaping clippings. He is serving a 30 day sentence on the vagrancy charge.

A number of people in Addison have been approached regarding the early life of Snyder, but no one has furnished any information about him. He gave his age as 51 and all youthful companions if he did live here, evidently have forgotten him.

The Catholic Church and Democracy are opposed to the totalitarian state whether it be Communistic, Fascist or Nazi" the Rev. Nationalism vs Religion

We need help from outside ourselves and there is no better helper than the giver of all graces. From this spiritual attitude it follows that we should not lead naturalistic existences. The man with a soul looks

YES WE HELPED

Addison can well be proud of the contribution this community made to relief work in China as a result of the "Bowl of Rice" supper held here in conjunction with the country-wide movement. In sending over fifty dollars to this worthy cause the citizens of this place can rest assured they did their bit to heal up the wounds of the injured and feed the hungering in a truly Christian spirit.

Our local contribution joined to the gifts of millions of Americans in thousands of like communities and large cities as well, has created an immense fund which will greatly help this sorely afflicted people. Many is the Chinese child who will be able to eat a bowl of life giving rice regularly now for the next few months because we Americans have proved that we can divide with those who have nothing. And as for us, although times are bad and the depression in this country is more severe on many people than it has been at any time before, still most of us can get enough to eat. And more than that, the plainest fare we have would be luxury hardly to be imagined by the poor, suffering people of China.

The "Bowl of Rice" suppers demonstrated to thousands of Americans in a clear-cut fashion how impoverished the unfortunate Chinese are. That we have extended helping hands while other nationals have been sending bombs, should be some measure of proof to the Chinese that we can to some extent practice the Christianity we have been preaching to them.

WHAT OF CHINA'S FLOOD?

There seems to be something almost fatalistic about this big flood in China. Here we find a courageous people who have been looked down upon by the militarists as something like the world's worst fighting men, fighting with their backs against the wall to save the land of their ancestors. China, the most disjointed land in the world, we find suddenly united into a national unit bending every fibre to the task of saving that land.

Nor does that seem to be enough. Brave though the defense of Shanghai. Marvelous though the stand of the poorly armed legions of General Chiang against the mechanized army of Japan, the latter have slowly pushed the Chinese from one stronghold after another. When an army has five men to every gun it takes superhuman courage to meet the foe while the four men out of the five cannot do any shooting. Yet even under those great handicaps the Chinese resistance has been so stubborn, and the war has lasted so much longer than the war lords in Japan told the people, the Japanese generals have become enraged. And their rage is being visited upon the heads of innocent women and children in the undefended cities like Canton where bombing planes have cast a hell of death and destruction.

When it seemed that China might be brought to her knees in spite of courage and determination, her friends were almost on the point of despair. It seemed the provisional capital at Hankow was doomed to be taken by a Japanese naval assault up the Yangtse River. One could hardly help wishing that some super-human force would be interposed to protect a peace loving nation from further invasion by a cruel foe that waged such an unprovoked war. Then something did happen.

Out of the mountains of China wound the great Yellow River. And suddenly the big, silt laden stream became as a river alive with the purpose of thwarting China's foes. Over the banks it rushed, pouring the flood waters over the lowlands and flatly in the faces of the brown sons of Nippon who had come to kill the people of China.

Halted was the vaunted war machine of Japan. The mechanized army that was rolling through walled cities which resisted invaders for centuries, was suddenly bogged down by a foe that it had not counted upon. Tractors, tanks, field artillery and ammunition trains dragged deep into the heart of China by gasoline engines, suddenly found the heart of China had become soft—so soft with the flooding waters of the Yellow River that the heavy machinery became bogged. Stalled in the mud and washed over by silty water, the machines of Japan have met a foe that no hand of man can control.

Poor bleeding China, scourged by fire and war, now scourged by the flood. Yet the flood which has driven hundreds of thousands from their homes, starving, has also stopped the invader dead in his tracks. The Yellow River will roll relentlessly on for weeks. The flood waters will pour from the north day after day. And the mechanized army of Japan can watch its machines stand mired in the mud of China until September. Probably the machines are ruined forever.

Who can say that this flood in China, in spite of the loss to that suffering people, is not a Divine intervention?

SENATOR COPELAND

When Senator Copeland died last week the country lost a public servant who literally gave up his life in the line of duty. Constantly he warned his colleagues to slow down the pace they were traveling lest the strain be too great for their human machines to weather, yet for himself the warning went unheeded. Senator Copeland was a doctor who refused to take his own medicine, when it interfered with what he considered the line of his duty.

A Democrat, Senator Copeland was none-the-less first of all an American, and when he found the policies of this administration running con- nation he put loyalty to country above loyalty to iantly against the New Deal efforts to re-make trary to his own ideas of what was best for the party. One of the issues in which he fought val- America was in the President's court-packing scheme. Senator Copeland battled that proposal right from the first when it appeared in those early days that nothing could prevent the Executive from having his way about adding six new, hand-picked judges to the court. In opposing the Administration he knew that he was likely to face reprisals in the shape of loss of patronage that would be dispensed by Senator Wagner, who has been one of the foremost New Deal legislators.

For his unquestioned loyalty to country above party, Senator Copeland deserves a place beside other immortals of the land who have given lives that the principles of freedom may live.

STAMPING ON THE FIRE BUG

The National Board of Fire Underwriters reports that during 1937 further notable progress was made in combating one of the most despicable of all crimes—arson.

For the period 1932 to 1936, inclusive, the yearly totals of both arrests and convictions for arson underwent an uninterrupted decline—in spite of increased vigilance by police, prosecuting authorities and insurance company investigators. In other words, the decline meant that the efficiency of this work proved to be a deterrent. A great many people who were tempted to commit arson saw that they couldn't get away with it.

During 1937, there was a slight increase in arrests and convictions over 1936, which is accounted for by the unfavorable economic conditions prevailing during the last half of the year. Even so, it is a noteworthy fact that in 1937 arrests were the lowest for any year of the past ten, excepting 1936, and that the ratio of convictions to acquittals was improved in favor of the former, which testifies to the success and energy of prosecutors.

The 1937 figures tell the story. Arrests rose 6 per cent over the previous year. Convictions increased by more than 21 per cent and acquittals were less than 5 per cent greater. And the ratio of convictions to acquittals was 80 per cent.

This is good news for America. The arsonist deserves no pity. He works in the dark and every time he strikes, the lives of innocent persons are endangered. Due to the surprise element, the chance of loss of life in arson fires is often abnormally high. The men who are fighting arson are serving us all.

The work done by Judge Pratt in stamping out the arson ring in Hornell while he was district attorney will long be remembered in Steuben County. The effect of fearless prosecution of criminals is reflected in lessening of crime waves, a fact proved by the smaller number of fires in this vicinity since Judge Pratt went after the Hornell ring.

"SUBSIDIZING DEPRESSION"

In an editorial entitled "Subsidizing Depression", the Christian Science Monitor recently said: "With one hand the Administration is working to make peace with the public utilities and encourage investments in the field which might be started for business recovery. The RFC is planning federal loans for utility construction. The SEC is trying to work out the holding company act so as to damage as little as possible companies which must be disentangled . . .

"But with the other hand the Administration is pushing a spending-lending bill which would give cities PWA funds up to 45 per cent of the cost of municipal electric plants. Thus it it subsidizing governmental competition in the very same field in which it is trying to remove fears of government competition and encourage private investment.

This is not a fair yardstick competition. It is setting up a governmental monopoly, blocking recovery investment, and subsidizing the destruction of present utility values. If that is what the left hand means, why not let the right hand know it? Or if that is not what the Administration's policy means, why not explain to the country?"

That presents an ominous situation in its true light. No industry in this country is more eager to go ahead than the utilities—and probably no industry could contribute more to re-employment, stimulate purchasing power and general business revival. But no sane investor is going to risk his money in the utility or any other industry when he knows that his savings may be destroyed almost overnight by subsidized, tax-free, unregulated government competition. Confidence is the main prerequisite of industrial investment—and confidence is what the country sorely lacks today.

A Truth Is Worth Repeating: Officials Are Public Employees

By ISABEL PATERSON

The La Follette family of Wisconsin has been in public office for two generations. Which means that one or more has been on the public pay roll during most of the period. The net balance can only be a matter of opinion; but under the American system the account may be closed whenever either side wishes to call it a day. So far the office holder is the one who usually pleads for a renewal.

Last April Governor Philip F. La Follette indicated dissatisfaction with the terms by issuing a six-point manifesto for a new party, the National Progressives. His definition of progress reads backward from the original American idea, which was that "the best governed country is the least governed." He is for government "ownership of money, without qualification or reservation." That is, for the direct confiscation of the property of citizens who have any cash. He also wants an extension of executive authority, "to get things done."

The rest of the proclamation consisted of generalities which might mean almost anything in the way of further powers. The whole adds up to power and more power.

Last week Senator Robert M. La Follette jr. published an article entitled "Taxes Should Be Higher," with the rider, "and fewer and more direct." Senator LaFollette goes on from where Governor La Follette left off. He affirms that "the scope of functions and the financial responsibilities of the Federal government are destined to increase in the future."

Sure of More Power

What Governor La Follette considers desirable, Senator La Follette holds to be inevitable. He assumes the axiom that there will be more power.

That is a nice slippery argumentative dodge, to take the premises for granted when they are the real subject of debate. It is to say: "Now, of course I'm going to grab your money anyhow so let's discuss whether I'll have it wrapped now or shall you send it to me."

Therefore "the time has come," says Senator La Follette, "to gear up the entire tax mechanism courageously, so that there will be a stable and ample flow of revenue." The heroism of this procedure may be appreciated from the fact that the Senator wants to collect from incomes of $1,000 a year.

Taxpayers, he says, "owe that much to the government that bestows countless benefits upon them in their daily lives."

Surely the time has come to inform office-holders of the principles of the American political structure. The first of these is that "the government" confers no benefits whatever upon any citizen. It has none to confer. The government is not a divinity showering down blessings upon abject mortals in return for their obedience and gratitude.

The Citizens Make It

Abstractly, it is a mechanism of law deriving its being and functions from the citizen. Concretely, it is a number of persons—far too many at present, and mostly the wrong ones—who are employed to perform specified tasks under delegated authority with strict limitations. They are paid for their time. And frequently overpaid.

They solicited their positions. Yet five years ago a majority of the members of the two main legislative assemblies by their own act avowed that they were incompetent to do the very work for which they had been engaged, and handed it over to the Executive, with concomitant powers of which they had no right to dispose. Nor do they find that they are now intelligent enough to resume their duties, and reclaim that proper function. Yet they demand more power.

Their position is honorable so long as they respect it themselves. But when an office-holder, an employee, not only refuses to do the work for which he was taken on, but spends his time and his employer's resources mending his own fences, passing hand-outs to relatives through the pantry window, and scheming how to bamboozle his employer into giving up the title deeds to the homestead, the time has come to remind him of the true nature of his engagement.

What the Citizen Owes

A citizen of modest income will feel that he has an obligation to his fellow citizens to pay his share for mutual benefits. But those benefits are not derived from "the government," which is only an agent. The citizen will recognize that he does owe a moral debt to his predecessors, who took personal risks and losses to establish his rights, against the insidious encroachments of office-holders He can discharge that obligation only to his children, by preserving those rights. He will be a moral defaulter if he transmits to them nothing but a deficit in principles and cash.

It is not quite prudent for office-holders today to begin talking about what any one "owes."

A reader asks, how should we resent "the insolence of elected persons? . . . What form would be effectual?" Would not those who do feel a just resentment be "greatly outnumbered by those who have directly or indirectly acquired a vested interest in the public treasury? . . Perhaps, as many say, there is nothing to be done but grin and bear it, hoping that the great body of the people will wake up in time."

I think that in these reflections there is an implicit error. No man's convictions are futile if he sticks to them with integrity. The truly invincible party is a majority of one. A group may be defeated, dispersed, or divided; all that any man can count on is himself. But it is enough In the last resort, there is no means by which he can be persuaded or compelled to say, think or do what he does not believe.

And everything happens first in the mind of the individual. If we are now under some degree of dictatorial whim, it is not through any external necessity. It is because ten or fifteen years ago Americans had so far forgotten the meaning of their heritage that some of them made silly remarks in private, thought silly thoughts, on dictatorship. They said: "What we need is a dictator." That doesn't have to be said very often before it brings about its own fulfillment. And if a man says "it's no use," for him nothing will be of any use.

Nobody can say how, when or where the thought will be translated into substantial form. But it always is. Nor need it come by violence. Consent is more fatal than violence; and resistance begins in the mind.

The 75th Congress

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic

Americans will regard with mixed emotions the record of the 75th Congress, and its effects on the welfare of our people.

During its three sessions, beginning in January, 1937, the Congress dealt with a wide variety of legislation. Within that period, citizens will recall, were fought thrilling legislative battles over the Supreme Court, the Reorganization Bill, the revised tax measure and others significant both to our Constitutional form of government and our national well-being.

But what the people will also recall is that despite swiftly-mounting expenditures of public funds, despite a record-breaking public debt, unemployment figures are expanding, production still lags, and relief rolls grow longer.

This is not what the people had hoped for when the 75th Congress opened its first session. It is not what they were promised back in January of 1937.

What the workers still want is real jobs and the real production which creates those jobs. What they consistently ask of any Congress is a record of constructive legislation to that end, rather than political maneuvering. On both these counts they have been frequently disappointed.

Throughout the nation the people are being asked to choose many of the men who will represent them next year on Capitol Hill. On these decisions will rest the fulfillment or the rejection of their demands.

Let them select as their agents in government men who by their records, both in and out of public life, have demonstrated a real intent to achieve recovery, regardless of factional pressure or of political considerations—and a long stride forward will be assured.

The purpose of Congress is still to serve all the people.

Broodiness may be a serious handicap to high egg production during the summer months, especially among the heavy breeds like New Hampshires and Rhode Island Reds.

Roosevelt Lucky In Congress

By MARK SULLIVAN

The outstanding feature of the Congress just closing was the relation between it and the President. This Congress was elected in the same election that gave to President Roosevelt an unparalleled victory, carrying all but two states. The Congress that came in with him was similarly unparalleled. In the Senate Mr. Roosevelt's party had seventy-five out of ninety-six; in the House 333 out of 435.

To speculate upon what a President might have done with such a predominance in Congress would be a futile toying with a historical "if." The fact is that after Mr. Roosevelt had had this power in Congress for thirty-two days he, on February 5, 1937, asked the Congress to give him what, if given, would have amounted to dominance over the Supreme Court and all the Federal courts.

To say this proposal split Mr. Roosevelt's party in Congress in half is inadequate. From that day only a minority of Mr. Roosevelt's party believed in him or was willing to follow him. True, slightly more than a half of Mr. Roosevelt's party in the Senate supported his court proposal; only by aid of all the sixteen Republicans was the court proposal rejected. But many Democratic Senators who went along with Mr. Roosevelt on the court proposal did so with utter unwillingness and dismay.

Two More Defeats Followed

The rejection of Mr. Roosevelt's court proposal in the Senate was followed in the House by rejection of another proposal that would have given him much additional power, the bill for the reorganization of the executive departments. Another measure desired by Mr. Roosevelt, the wage and hour bill, was also rejected by the House.

Thus, during the early months of the present year, a President whose party had much more than two-thirds of the Senate and much more than two-thirds of the House had, nevertheless, lost his leadership of both bodies. This leadership he recovered to a large degree. Under pressure from him, the House actually reversed itself on the wage and hour bill. It passed, in May (in a much changed form, to be sure), by a vote of 314 to 97, the wage and hour bill which in December it had rejected by a vote of 216 to 198.

This recovery of power in Congress by Mr. Roosevelt is virtually without precedent. So rarely as to be practically never does a President in his second term regain a once-lost control over Congress. Mr. Roosevelt's feat is the more remarkable in that economic conditions were unfavorable to him. Simultaneously with the action that lost Mr. Roosevelt his control of Congress, his attempt to change the courts, a business depression began and continues increasingly until this day.

That, under all these conditions, the President should regain his control of Congress, is remarkable. For his good fortune, the reason lay largely in one event, a primary election in one event. In Florida, a Senator, Mr. Pepper, running for renomination on a record of substantially 100 per cent support of Mr. Roosevelt's measures, coupled with promise of similar support in the future, won his renomination by so large a majority as to be, under the circumstances, striking. It created a strong impression that the President was still popular.

In all politics and all history, there is much that is fortuitous. Other primaries in other states, following soon after the Florida one, had outcomes from which no such impression favorable to Mr. Roosevelt would have been deduced. In one primary, in Iowa, an attempt by Mr. Roosevelt's intimate lieutenants, almost certainly with Mr. Roosevelt's approval, to prevent renomination of a Senator who had opposed his court proposal, Mr. Gillette, was disastrously defeated.

The Iowa primary was held June 6. The Florida one had been held a month before, May 3. Had those two dates been reversed, had the Iowa primary occurred on May 3, we should probably not now be recording that Mr. Roosevelt regained control of his party in Congress. On the contrary, we might readily be saying that Mr. Roosevelt's bare loss of control at the beginning became a rout toward the end.

Seesaw Struggle Witnessed

The conflict between the President and Congress had the appearance of a seesaw struggle for dominance between, on the one hand, a strong leader in the White House ambitious for more and more power, and, on the other hand, a Congress determined to recover its status as a co-equal branch of government.

But something else went on, too. The opposition to Mr. Roosevelt came mainly from his own party. Quite possibly Mr. Roosevelt would have had little trouble if he had stayed within the bounds of traditional Democratic policy. This gives an additional significance to the resistance to him. One might say that Mr. Roosevelt sought to impose a new philosophy on the Democratic party, that the Democratic leaders in Congress felt outraged, and that the stake in the tug-of-war that has ensued is whether the Democratic party is to survive or whether it is to be swallowed up by a new party, the New Deal party. That tug-of-was is still on. Viewed in this light, the outcome of the nomination and election of a new Congress this summer and fall may be a major turning point in our history.

Addison Catholic Men Told Totalitarian State is UnAmerican

above for guidance to determine whither he is going while the worldly man indulges in self-satisfaction.

"We are intelligent men with free wills. We should be above the world and inform ourselves on the Christian way and the right path on which we should go. The Church in the world tells us wither we are tending and helps us along the path, not only to the grave but beyond.

"The body is buried under six feet of earth but the soul soars on. The world is not interested in the soul, but the Church is. We need the spiritual guidance of the Church to bring us to the hereafter.

"This Father's Day you attended communion and sought help from above. How many there are who do not do this. Many men are self-satisfied. Many have lost their faith and are losing it every day. They care not for the future for they believe in letting tomorrow take care of itself.

"If we are human, we should use our minds and have faith in the existence of God and the supernatural life with God. You have decided from your own examination of conscience that you are on the right track. Does it pay you to stay there? If you are not acting as reasonable Catholic men the world will tell you to accumulate everything for yourself. The Church says 'enjoy yourself and accumulate, but do so with charity and justice. The Church path is strewn with charity and justice and it will lead us to a natural end of a life with God.

Justice and Charity

"We are living in strange times and oftentimes we ask 'what is it all for?' Our national problems and the world problems will only be solved when we all come to justice and charity for all.

State Supreme

"Much is heard these days of Communism, Fascism, Nazism and capitalism, our modern system of capitalism. There are all species of totalitarianism. Why is the world subject to this type of authority? What is this tendency towards which nations are drifting? That is all nations outside of Democracies. And some say it is happening here. If America don't look out it will happen here. Do we want it? No.

Democracy is Liberty

"We who have enjoyed Democracy enjoy the products of that Democracy including freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom of assembly and freedom of the press. It is liberty. The highest standard of living of any nation in the world is enjoyed here.

There are those who are boring in with Communism and other isms. They say they have systems better than we. We should look into all forms of totalitarianism for this makes the state supreme and what the dictator says the people must like. In America the wishes of the people are above the state and the state is subject to the will of the people and not to the will of a dictator.

Russian System

"After the World War pandemonium broke out in Russia. Lenin clamped down with the Bolshevist form of government. It is a form of slavery which subdues all to the state.

"Lenin secured his theories from Karl Marx, a Godless German-Jew. It is these theories that we must overcome. Marx in turn secured his philosophy from the Godless Germans Fouerbach and Haigle.

Philosophy of Communism

"Haigie held that everything is matter. There is nothing spiritual, there is no soul, hence there is no hereafter, which brings about the belief in no religion, no God and nothing outside of the natural order. The only law is the law of the state for there is no natural law. Through a process of evolution matter revolving in space brought forth plants, animals and man and without the soul man is as the animals. Of course, Haigle does not explain how these beginnings came about nor does he explain life hereafter. This school holds that we should live as the animals and let our minds be subject to the state. Man can be brought to the highest state of efficiency through being regimented. This is what they are trying to teach in Russia, but there is no peace nor happiness where a people are regimented.

"All religion is decimated in Russia. They will tell you that religious freedom is guaranteed in the Constitution rewritten a year ago. It's a lie. When religion raises its head the priests and ministers are executed as they have been by the thousands and the buildings are taken over by the state. The experiment in Russia has been tried and failed and all thinking men know it is a failure".

The speaker then referred to Eugene Lyons' book on "Adventure in Utopia". Mr. Lyons, a well educated New York Jew, went to Russia as United Press correspondent and imbued with the idea that Communism was the world saving political theory. After three years he returned from Russia to condemn the injustices of the Communistic system and tell of the unhappiness of the people. Lyons gives it as his opinion that such a system cannot last.

Beware of Borers

Father Groden continued, "Communist minions are boring in here in our schools, legislative halls, labor organizations and agriculture centers and into all phases of life. There is not the fear of them today that there was but we all should be on our guard.

Fascism

"A word about Fascism. This creeps up as it did in Europe and if present conditions continue in America for two more years many will believe Democracy a failure and be willing to try Fascism. No one knows the answer to the present dilemma. But let us not be hasty in wanting to try something else. There does come a time in depressions when many say, 'it can't be worse, let's try a dictator' but if America ever does try a dictator, America will be sorry because we will become the same as totalitarianism Russia.

"Dictators are the same. There are no aspects of freedom in dictator-governed countries. In those countries the state must be supreme and and hence the church is subjected to the state. The Church will never be defeated. It may be crushed, its youth may be alienated and taught atheistic doctrines and create a race of completely indoctrinated totalitarianistic youth, but the Church will rise as it has in past crises over the years.

"In Italy Mussolini has sense enough to leave religion alone, but Fascism is the same as Nazism, for nothing must be above the state and trouble can be expected.

Something Wrong in America

"Modern American capitalism is wrong when a few owning most of the wealth can live in luxury at the expense of the many who are starving and in need. We must have faith in America, however, to solve the problem of justice in our national wealth. America has solved her problems and will continue to if we will be patient under these trials and not accept Communism, Fascism and Nazism.

Church Has Solution

"The Church has the solution to these problems. If we will forget greediness we will get along. So long as man outlaws justice and charity just so long will America be upset. The encyclicals of Pope Pius X and Leo XV on labor, Catholic literature gives us the Catholic viewpoint on these questions. Discuss these questions in your club and be informed on matters of the moment so you can give an enlightening answer to Communists and others. Be versed in industrial and agricultural problems which concern your community and know the Catholic viewpoint. I know many of you are losing your homes and farms, but as Americans let us have faith. Let us not dump Americanism and try something else.

"Let us not have hatred for our fellow man, even for the Communist. We must love him but hate his doctrines. He is misguided. Be informed on the Church's attitude and secure your solutions from the great Teacher of all mankind and you will have the self-satisfaction in being informed and being able to argue with even the most rabid communist. The Church is right and he is wrong and you have right on your side".

3. A document given to the master of a ship by the proper authority of the port from which the ship clears, describing the sanitary state. Like ship captains, individuals may receive a Bill of Health from their personal physician. The best way to receive a "clean" one is to get three meals a day including plenty of milk, fresh vegetables and fruits as well as sufficient rest, sunshine and fresh air.

BRASS TACKS For POULTRY RAISERS

By BURTON P. THARP

Disease Prevention

The primary factor in disease prevention is the practice of absolute cleanliness. If the premises are kept clean and proper feed and care are given the flock there is little chance of disease unless it is brought in from outside on crates, bags, visitors or the importation of other chickens.

Farmers and others who raise a considerable number of chicks each year will find that a crematory or some other means of burning the carcasses of diseased birds will save many dollars in preventing the spread of any disease which strikes the flock.

Burying is not satisfactory particularly if the flock has access to the places used for burying dead birds. Skunks find the plots excellent for a hunting ground and will dig up birds and even rotten eggs. They seem to relish anything in the line of animal matter after it has been buried. This necessitates reburying what the skunks don't eat.

There are two very simple ways of building a satisfactory crematory which need cost little or nothing. A steel one may be made from a common tar barrel such as may be seen along highways. The empties are often available for nothing. Cut a fire-box door at the bottom. The door should be about 15 inches across and about a foot high. About a foot from the bottom drill or punch half-inch holes through the sides of the barrel. Three-eighth inch iron rods are run through the holes forming a grate for the carcasses to rest upon just above the flames.

A heavy wire screen or hardware cloth may be cut and placed upon the rods for burning small birds. The heat from the fire may be concentrated in a small area of the grate by placing sheet iron on the grate so that a small portion of the grate is exposed.

Another effective way of cremating the birds is that of building a stone or concrete fire place similar to those used for out-of-door cooking. The grate should be about two feet wide by 18 inches deep. Above the grate a front of stone or sheet iron should be placed so that all the heat of the fire draws up through the grate. The more the heat can be concentrated on the grate the faster the carcasses will burn. The fire should be burned until the birds are reduced to ashes. The ashes may be thrown out or used in the garden as fertilizer without fear of disease spreading.

In villages and thickly populated neighborhoods crematories may arouse considerable criticism because they really give the place some atmosphere. If the carcasses are burned quickly with a very hot fire there is less odor.

A good home-made furniture polish may be made by mixing dne quart of hot water, three tablespoons of linseed oil, and one tablespoon of turpentine.

Troops are being shifted at great expense from the flood zone where only two weeks ago the Japs were on the verge of capturing Chengchow which they planned to use as a base for a drive upon the provincial capital. Meanwhile the Chinese forces are being reorganized and will have a strongly prepared defense position when the Japs drive towards Hankow from the east instead of the northeast. The flood has cost the Japanese huge sums in lost equipment and changed plans with the concurrent delay.

LOG of the U.S. MARINES

"Greater Love Hath No man"

Rumblinbs of the earth alarmed the peasants of the little French village of Cinq-Mars on a May morning in 1931. For years many of its inhabitants had lived in the traditional manner of their ancestors, occupyinb caves instead of more modern dwellings.

Disaster, swimt and sudden, menaced their homes as the ground shook and trembled, while a landslide of rocks and earth threatened to wipe out the caves which for ages had sheltered the peasant folk of this quaint community.

Undismayed by the panic of the moment, stood Brigadier General Robert H. Dunlap, of the Marine Corps, on temporary duty in France By a strange quirk of fate he happened to pay a casual visit to Cinq-Mars that day.

Suddenly a French woman screamed and ran for one of the caves which had been fashioned into a barn. Sensing her danger General Dunlap and the woman's husband followed, shouting their warnings as they ran. They hoped to drag the panic-stricken woman to safety.

They were too late. Buried beneath the falling debris and stones which descended like an avalanche on the would-be rescuers, the lives of the two gallant men were snuffed out. Hours later rescue workers found their bodies. The woman was crippled for life.

Ou the breast of General Dunlap's uniform were ribbons he had won in the Philippines, China, Mexico, and the battlefields of France, including the Navy Cross and D. S. C. Today a monument marks the scene of his last act of chivalry while the destroyer Dunlap was named in his honor.

WPA May Be Used On Private Forests

Under present law, WPA can not legally be used in the development of private properties, but an effort is being made, through the United States Forest Service, according to the Chief of the Service, Ferdinand A. Silcox, who visited the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse University recently, to provide for the use of WPA labor on private forest lands under certain restrictions and provisions yet to be worked out.

Mr. Silcox believed that an opportunity exists in this field which, if properly organized, would result beneficially not only to the particular property involved, but to these public generally. He points out that forests are resources of such tremendous value not alone from the dollar-and-cents viewpoint,but from the viewpoint of the social and other indirect, though material, benefits to the people that the improvement of any private forest is a public benefit. He feels that we have been thinking too much of the dollars-and-cents phase of forestry to the exclusion of its equally important, if not more importint, indirect aspects, flood control, erosion, employment and as a source of thousands of by-products which have and may have a direct bearing upon the prosperity of the country and the happiness of its people.

These considerations together with the remarkable developments in scientific research already achieved with relation to forets products and the promise of an almost unlimited field in the future would seem to bring the forest into a more prominent place as a basic resource than ever before. This, Mr. Sincox believes, justifies the use of WPA in private forest developments under the supervision of trained foresters.

Conservation is New Way of Thinking

"What is conservation? Everybody has an idea about it because the word is in such general use. Few persons go much further than the definition given in the dictionary —many not that far—and have never considered the broad application of the word as it is used by foresters and specialists in other fields," says the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse University.

In explaining conservation, some authorities state that it is not a subject, but a method of living; others say that it must be considered as an activity, or an attitude toward thrift; still others, that it is a new way of thinking of which the American people are in great need.

Conservation does not mean just to preserve, or to protect, or to nurture. It does, however, carry those ideas. It is definitely opposed to destruction, extravagance and neglect. Conservation is nothing temporary or occasional, or epidemic. It must be continuous and constructive and profitable. In this sense, conservation should influence our daily lives and everything we do because in the last analysis, and in using the word in its broadest sense, it means doing the right thing all of the time. So conservation applies to our individual habits at home, in the office, and in public places like the forests and fields and on the waterways.

Conservation means wise use of time, funds, material, health and natural resources, such as the forests, the soils and wild life, the use that, under all the circumstances, obtains the best possible in the interest of society.

Already more than 44,000 boys and girls in many different parts of the United States have been measured to help the United States Bureau of Home Economics to set up standard sizes for children's clothes.

To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste
Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.
Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.
You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

This Week In Sports

By The Grandstander

The Addison town baseball nine seems to have a well working organization based on the game with Elkland Sunday. The boys have a tendency to get a little careless when the going is good and sometime this is going to cost them a ball game and public support.

—o—

And this reminds me that many would have attended the game had they known more about it. This paper carried two articles, but the game should have been advertised more and a bigger gate would have been the result. It has been proved that advertising pays.

—o—

The Bambino has re-entered the game he loved so well. True he is far from his old team mates in policy while near them geographically. It is understood the Brooklyn Dodgers are going to pay him $15,000 for his counsel for the balance of the season.

—o—

The longest baseball game I ever heard of ran 41 innings. It was played between Carleton High of Michigan and Mercer High, April 4, 1935. There was to be a doubleheader that day, the first contest got under way at 10 in the morning. However, this game lasted until sunset when Carleton scored all its runs in the last half of the last inning. Can you beat it?

Sportsmen are still agitating over the question of permitting an open deer season here. Game Warden Reed tells me that he hears farmers south of the river will post their lands if the question becomes law. Deer sure are plentiful judging from the number of farmers who are complaining of buckwheat tops eaten and motorists, complaints of hitting them on the highway.

—o—

The ace of milers, Glenn Cunningham, defeated Archie San Romani for the first time on the Princeton track Saturday. He did not establish a record but he sure sped ahead of the field. San Romani claimed after the run that he was fouled by Cunningham but did not file a formal protest. He hit the curb on the inside of the track and lost his stride. This happened before in one of his major races.

—o—

No need of me recalling Van Der Meers feat to you at this time for it sure has received ample publicity. And like a wise boy he ducked the publicity hounds, radio scouts, vaudeville scouts and others who would have him capitalize on his deed of pitching the successive no-hit and no-run games.

—o—

California's Golden Bears crew came east last Saturday and trimmed Cornell in all three races on the three-mile Lake Cayuga course. They established a record of 15.51 for the course. They also took the junior varsity and freshmen races.

—o—

Connie Mack was honored in Cleveland during the past week when he was presented a scroll from some of baseball's dignitaries. "Connie Mack" Day was observed in Cleveland.

—o—

Collegiate racing crews are in Poughkeepsie practicing in preparation for the annual regatta on the Hudson June 27. Syracuse, Columbia and Navy were the first crews to arrive, followed by California and Washington.

Did you listen to the fight?

—o—

Local young fellows over 15 years of age are eligible for the first tennis tournament ever held in Addison. Entries may be filed with Milt Crane before June 30. Pairings will be announced at that time. There will be a slight charge for registration to cover the cost of balls and prizes. The Grandstander takes credit for instituting the idea and hopes it will be an annual affair.

Deacon Dan MacFayden, the Bees' bespectacled ace, got off to a worse start than any pitcher in the National League. The Giants belted him off the hill with five hits and only one out in the first inning on opening day. But after that things were different. In fact, the Deacon didn't lose another game until he ran into Johnny Vander Meer's no-hitting June 11.

—o—

Max Butcher, Brooklyn's big West Virginian mountaineer, was the Texas League most-valuable-player trophy winner in 1935, getting a flying start to his 24 victories for the year by taking 11 straight right at the start. He pitched for the Galveston Buccaneers.

—o—

Joe Moore, the Giants' great left-fielder, never needs any rigorous conditioning work at training camp. The baseball season is a vacation to the Gause Ghost after putting in a winter working 12 hours a day on his 420-acre ranch along the Brazos River down Texas way.

—o—

Emmett Batboy Bueller, the Phillies' litle slugger, started studying National League pitchers at the tender age of 10. Before he was Cardinals' batboy he belonged to St. Louis Knothole Gang. For six solid years, as Knothole Gang member and Cardinal batboy, he never missed a Cardinal game at Sportsman's Park.

—o—

Arkansas is a swift enough State to suit anybody, judging from the major league baseball star who wears the state name as his sobriquet. "Arky" Vaughan, of the Pittsburgh Pirates, was a high school 100-yard dash champion and in his only year of minor league baseball, he stole 43 bases for Wichita.

—o—

Johnny Mize, star first-baseman and Blonde Bomber of the St. Louis Cardinals' batting order, was an outfielder in 1932 at Elmira when he was the unanimous choice for the NYPA League all-star team.

Gas Taxes for Highways Is Auto Club Aim

Albany—"There should be no compromise with the principle of desdicating the taxes paid by motor vehocle owners tobuilding and maintaining roads", states a telegram received by the Highways Committee of the Constitutional Convention from the New York State Automobile Association.

That organizatiion, through Truman H. Preston, Vice-President, reiterates its stand on behalf of the proposal introduced by John C. Montana "as the real, final, and adequate solution for this major issue".

Mr. Preston states that Constitutional action is necessary to protect the state's investment in its highway system.

The Montana amendment, originally drawn and spansored by the State Association, dedicates all motor vehicle registration fees and gasoline taxes, after July 1, 1941, to hiighway purposes.

Gasoline Trade Papers Are Being Investigated

Albany, June23— Trade papers in the retail gasoline field will be subjected to investigation by the New York State Joint Legislative Committee investigating the Petroleum industry at a two day session in New York City beginning Wednesday, June 22, it was announced here today by Assemblyman Harold B. Ehrlich, chairman of the Committee .

Editors, publishers, business managers and other executives responsible for the policies of the papers have been subpoenaed to appear at the hearing, whiich will be held at the New York County Bar Association building, 14 Vesey Street.

"We want to know how these papers are financed said Mr. Ehrlich,. "They purport to represent the retail dealers, but each one seems to have a different policy, and at times they seem to advocate ideas which are directly opposed to the welfare of the small dealer and consumer alike".

"Dealers should know why this is so; but have no way of ascertaining this information."

"These hearings will also give an opportunity to determine whether any of these so called trade papers are subsidized, and if so, by whom and why."

The committee is conducting these hearings as part of their added duties of studying retail dealers' problems.

Agriculture Department Saves Farmers $600,000 Jump in Freight Rates

Petitions by railroads to the Interstate Commerce Commission to reconsider its decision denying increased freight rates on New York State agricultural products, have been rejected, Commissioner Holton V. Noyes of the Department of Agriculture and Markets announced.

The increased freight rates, if granted gy the Interstate Commerce Commission, would have added $400,000 to $600,000 yearly to the freight bill of New York State shippers of fruits, vegetables and hay.

Opposed by the Traffic Bureau of the Department of Agriculture and Markets and allied agricultural interests of New York State, the Commissions decision adverse to the railroads was made in mid-April. The carriers moved soon afterward to reopen the case with the support of the Virginia State and West Virginia Horticultural Societies.

The New York State Public Service Commission concurred with the I. C. C. in its decision.

Director L. J. Dorr of the Department's Traffic Bureau said the refusal of the Interstate Commerce Commission to reopen the case means that victory for New York State farm interests is virtually achieved. Commissioner Noyes described the Commission's decision in April as "one of the most important decisions ever made in favor of New York State agriculture.

LINDLEY

Mr. and Mrs. Vet Thompson returned home June 19, from the Arnot-Ogden Hospital. Both are much improved in health.

The Home Bureau meeting held at Addison, Wednesday was well attended. Mrs. Kenneth Armstrong gave a very instructive and interesting talk on the care of the feet.

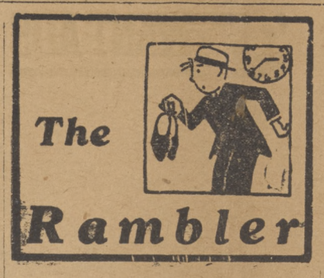
Wild strawberries are commencing to ripen a little in the more open, sunny places. Berries of all kinds give promise of bountiful crop.

A neighbor remarked to a little Miss, returning home from school in early forenoon, "you will soon be getting a vacation, and then inquired, "what day does your school close?" The little Miss promptly replied, Friday, but I have this day, now, between yesterday and tomorrow.

Among guests that assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs W.alter Rusby, Father's Day were:

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond E. Fiske of Honeoye Falls; Mr. and Mrs. Francis O. Snyder and son, Clair Stanley, of Corning; Emery Rusby of Addison; Prof. and Mrs. Carland Mann, and children Arthur and Kenneth and Mrs. Lula Mitchell of Campbell.

Having time is at hand. The sound of mowers is again heard in the fields, as farmers start gathering their crops of hay and alfalfa, which the numerous rains, have made abundant throughout this section.



Why do people with old automobiles think they can speed on highways at the same rate as the new cars. I have noticed this especially in Steuben Street. It seems the older the car the faster the driver thinks he should go. Sometimes I think it would be a good idea to junk all cars over three years of age. People seem to forget that cars wear out.

While in the past she has been sheltered by home, friends and teacchers she knows.

Charles Park saw a bear and has marks on his car to prove it. He was coming home over the Pennsylvania hills when he saw cars stopping on a rise of ground. a bear was putting his nose in the windows looking for something to eat. The bear put his paws upon the car and snooped in, but Mr. Parks was a little too quick on the window lever and had his glass most of the way up before long, so Mr. Bear ambled to another car Not a plersant experience.

The high school band is to give a concert in front of the village hall Saturday night. Hope you all attend and give the young musicians encouragement.

And speaking of that reminde me that Wombough Park would have been a good place for this, if there were benches there. Many cars could be parked around the park to relieve Main Street congestion and yet people would come to attend the concert.

A young high school girl was in the post office Tuesday afternoon and with a wastebasket less than three feet from her threw a large piece of paper on the floor rather than reach for the basket. The girl was not from here, but I can see why John O'Keefe has to apply a broom diligently there daily.

The Old Rambler celebrated a birthday Tuesday and was treated right royally by Mrs. and Little Master Rambler. In fact the last named little fellow smiled all day and did not cry once. The years have been kind to me as have God, friends, and neighbors.

Truth is stranger than fiction. Dr. Auringer attended the graduating exercises for Edward at Manlius Saturday. There he met two doctors, one from Gloversville and one from Albany, who were with him in Albany Medical School and who went abroad about the same time to serve in the United States Army in France. They likewise had sons graduating in Manlius.

The Rambler extends the best of wishes to the members of the graduating class of the Addison High School on behalf of the staff of the Advertiser. This class has been an active class and good news copy. Its activities have brought us advertising. And it has been a pleasure to work with the members of the class and their faculty advisor, for they have been cooperative. We congratulate them and hope that this will truly be the commencement of a fuller and richer life for them all.

That's all.

Around Our House

Along with summer and lts cool drinks, crisp salads, and chilled desserts come thoughts of electric refrigerators, and how to get the best equipment for the money.

Most important, perhaps, is a dealer who will stand back of his refrigerator and be near enough for service and advice; and the next is the size: the capacity needed, and the amount of space available. In households where the refrigerator will be needed to store not only day-to-day, but also the reserve, supplies, such as butter, eggs and cream, probably a six or eight-cubic-foot capacity will be needed.

The size of the cabinet should be plainly stated on the name plate, in cubic feet of usable food storage space. Too great a distance between shelves decreases usable space.

Ask the dealer about the insulation of the walls and doors. At least two inches of good insulition good insulation material is essential for economical operation. A common and satisfactory insulating material is vegetable fibre or cork made into slabs and coated with a waterproof substance.

The food compartment should be so placed and arranged that it is easily reached without stooping and the legs should be long enough to permit cleaning underneath. Shelves should be non-tarnishable, strong, and easy to clean. Some of them shauld be removable so that a different arrangement of space is possible.

For more complete information on buying refrigerators and other electrical equipmeit, write to the Office of Publications, Roberts Hall Ithaca, New York for Cornell bulletin E-358.

Sees Need For Rural Workshop

In many communities a need for a rural workshop that is equipped with alll the tools and machines needed for general repair work, manned by a trained mechanic. The success of the operator will depend on his ability to do all the work that the neighborhood offers.

Many persons can remember the time when the local blacksmith was busy most of the time repairing farm macchinery. Today rural 'smiths are scarce, but more machinery is now used and the repair work needs to be done just as in the days gone by.

These are statements of Professor L. M. Roehl of the New York State College of Agriculture. He says much repair work requires equipment that few farmers can afford to own. The rural shop can give excellent service with arc or acetylene welding equipment on macchinery, tractors, and cars.

Wany other repair or service jobe can be done by some farmers themselves, but others cannot do them or prefer to have them done well by a skilled man. Mending the harness, shoeing horses, filing, gumming, and setting saws, overhauling the binder, and sharpening the ensilage cutter blades fill keep a rural repair man busy, sals Professor Roehl.

The farm home too, will furnish jobs: sewing machines that need service, vacuum cleaners and washing machines that refuse to work, tools aidscissors that need sharpening, and furniture that needs repair. Folks from miles around should come to the man who can do any repair job that arises on the farm or in the home.

Depleted Forests May Be Revived

The sad story of many wood land areas in the Northeast, particularly in the more thickly populated sections, should give the owners of such property food for serious thought . At one time, valuable forests covered most of these areas but today many of the forests are being reduced to the economic vanishing point, according to the Extension Department of the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse University.

The clearing of land for agriculture and then the abandonment of the land as agriculture moved further west, led to the return of forest growth on the formerly cleared areas, but in most cases it was of inferior character. Most of these forests are easily accessible because of the improved highway systems and they have been stripped of their valuable species from time to time to meet the owner's needs, or, as market opportunities presented themselves. They have been used indiscriminately for fuel wood and timber for construction purposes. In many cases they have been burned over which brought on treegrowth of a scrubby character and this has reduced these areas to a practical worthless condition:

Some of these forests, however, may be rehabilitated if care is taken in protecting them from grazing and fire, and in cutting at the right time, and in many cases thinning out undesirable species of trees to allow the more valuable trees opportunity for development. The principal objective ofthe care of such woodland is to eventually produce a growing stock that will yield the maximum crop of commercially valuable timber, but the woodland must be handled so as to, at all times, maintain a growing stock.

Addison Defeats Elkland in Little Six League Game

Elkland came, saw and was conquered here Sunday afternoon in a home game for the Addison entry in the Little Six League. The Addisonites piled up an early run lead while Flynn was holding the visitors to a few scattered hits and managed to come out on the long end of an 8 to 4 score.

The locals opened in the first with Hewson as leadoff man, Heidrick walked and Grange hit into an error. G. Heidrick was struck out and Kelly walked. Bill Root swung his mighty club and struck out and Willis made the third out on a pop to the pitcher. When it was over Addison had three runs. The visitors scored one run in the third, two in the eighth and one in the ninth. They scored on three clean hits and an error.

The winners scored three more runs in the fourth inning on a hit into an error by Wade, fielder's choice play by Root and a sacrifice by Willis. Flynn got a hit to get on base and Hewson and F. Heidrick hit to end the scoring. In the eighth inning the Addison sticks again swung with two runs resulting. Addison made eight runs on six hits in the contest and the visitors scored four runs on seven hits.

Report Yearly Herd Records

Steuben County boasts five Dairy Herd Improvement Associations testing monthly 2,725 cows for 155 dairymen throughout the county. During the 1937 calendar year ninety-eight herd record summaries were returned to owners for their information and study.

Of this number sixty-seven had managed to show a herd average of 300 lbs. or more of butterfat, with the entire average yearly production o f the group 8,218 lbs. of milk and 321.1 lbs. of fat. This figure is in sharp contrast with a national butterfat average per cow of approximately 150 lbs.

Of notable mention from these reports is Floyd Loper's herd of registered Ayrshires. Nine cows made average production of 9998 lbs. and 421.5 lbs fat. High cow in the dairy was Nancy's Ruby. This cow was milked 336 days, an honor roll cow 12 months during lactation period, and produced 13966 lbs. milk and 553.8 lbs. fat.

Charles Scudder, Campbell, also made excellent record on herd of twenty-five Holsteins. This herd produced 10384 lbs. milk and 396.5 lbs. butterfat. High cow for butterfat was Roonie making 12733 lbs. milk and 498.2 lbs. fat.

C. A. Stewart and Son, Addison, with twenty-eight registered Holsteins made very good record with average production of 10997 milk and 390.7 lbs. butterfat. High cow in this herd produced 14879 milk and 549.9 lbs. fat.

What Do You Know About Health?

By FISHER BROWN and NAT FALK

Answers: 1. Goiter; so-called after Derbyshire, a county in England where goiter is, or was, common. In this country, goiter used to be prevalent in the Great Lakes area due to lack of iodine in the water supply. Under the care of a doctor, most cases of simple goiter can now be cured.

2. The Roman Emperor who, in 312 B. C., had the aqueduct, the Aqua Appia, constructed. This was the forerunner of our modern pure water supply and sewage systems which are invaluable as health protection.

3. Derived from the Greek words pais, meaning child and iatreia, meaning medical treatment, a pediatrician is a doctor who specializes in the diseases of children.

Rapid Progress Made on New Gas Station

Work on the new gasoline station at the village hall corner has progressed rapidly in the past few days. Construction was started approximately a week ago by the Sisto Lumber Company, contractors for the building and yesterday the outside walls were up to full height. The pit is dug in the lubritorium and yesterday afternoon carpenters were putting up the forms to cement the walls of the pit.

Workmen employed by the American Oil Company which has leased this property for a term of years, finished installation of the gasoline tanks Tuesday. Two tanks buried have a combined capacity of more than 1,600 gallons.

M. O. Hickman, division manager for the American Oil Company was in Addison yesterday to check some details of the construction. Mr. Hickman assured the contractor he was well pleased with both the progress on the building and the excellence of its construction. He has not announced the name of the operator who will have charge of the new station as yet.

George A. King Addresses Steuben County Justices

litigants and often as not when it is all over he has them shaking hands. As Justice Hughes said, 'They are doing it all over the nation.'

Great Service Rendered

"People do not realize how much the justices are serving their fellow men. It is important that when these matters are settled the participants have a good taste left. That is as to civil matters.

"People do not realize what a great service local justices render in having all these blanks on hand to take care of the multitude of matters that come before them. I venture to say that a lawyer from New York set down in a local justice's office wouldn't know what it was all about. He'd be confused.

"Now there's no reason for me to give you any instruction. There is no reason as far as the justices of Steuben County are concerned. You are doing a good piece of work. Search of the county court records will reveal there have been an insignificant number of reversals of your judgement. There has sometimes been criticism leveled at justices that they, perhaps, gave too long sentences to first offenders. But no one outside of the justice may know all the circumstances connected with the case. No one knows how the justice may have labored with these people to keep them in the straight path, and then when finally nothing else could be done about it the justice may have dealt a sentence that seemed excessive. Yet a sentence that seems excessive to an outsider may be just under the circumstances—is probably justified by the facts.

Trial Notes

"There is no need for me to point out to you your duties. You know them already—A good rule to follow to do away with reversals on appeals is to see all your papers are in order. See there is an information sworn to before you make out a warrant and have the officer serve it. Make all your entries in the docket. When a man accused of driving while intoxicated desires to plead guilty you must inform him that he will lose his license. If a man wants a trial it isn't necessary to have a stenographer there to take notes, but make notes enough in your own hand writing so you will have something written of what the witnesses say against him and what the witnesses say for him. Even though it is sketchy, the higher court can then see there has been a fair trial.

Verdicts Sound

"As far as your verdicts are concerned, basically they are sound, basically they are right and stand. Your records speak for themselves. This county has received hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of service from you,even valued at laborers' wages. Why should a whipper snapper from New York say a man must be taken way off to some corner of the county to get a fair trial?

"A justice court has been called a poor man's court.. Well it's a rich man's court too, he must answer to your warrant. In looking over the record of justice court cases the Appellate Division has often been amazed at your good sense and the good judgement shown in your decisions. The community you serve is satisfied with your court. And I join that great host of the community in saying you have done your work well.

Never Shirk Duty

"You have never refused to do your duty, no matter what hour of the night you have been called out. You have not issued warrants recklessly nor carelessly, nor have you issued warrants to satisfy a grudge. Someone located in Hornell, Corning or Bath cannot administer justice as you administer it. You justices have been fair to the citizens as well as to the police. The latter have been made to feel they must produce facts to warrant an arrest. On your shoulders is the burden of seeing that your fellow citizens are not improperly incarcerated—their names improperly blackened.

"As t o your decisions it is not expected that all men will think alike. Even Supreme Court Justices split on decisions.

"Now as for me, do not hestitate to ask when you feel I can be of assistance. Call on me at any time of the day or night—even though it be at 2:00 A. M. It is my duty to respond . I will respond."

C. L. Crane

Charles L. Crane spoke briefly at the conclusion of the address lauding Mr. King as a true public servant who has shown his willingness to serve the county. He called attention to the grievance committee of the County Bar Association and requested that any grievance anyone had against a Steuben lawyer should be brought before that committee where it would be threshed out to ascertain the facts.

The group remained nearly an hour after formal adjournment taking part in the round table discussions. Justices were present from Avoca Addison, Cameron, Cohocton, Howard, Jasper, Greenwood Lindley, Prattsburg, Canisteo, perkinsville, Wayland, Fremont, Tuscarora, Hornby, Bradford, Woodhull Corning, Painted Post and Hornellsville.

Ed Auringer Manlius Grad

Edward Auringer, son of Dr. and Mrs. Horace E. Auringer was among the 52 graduates from the Manlius School Saturday. A large group of friends from Addison and vicinity attended the exercises. The Addisonites returned home after the festivities and Edward remained to take his college entrance examinations, which will be concluded this week.

The ceremony was marked with all the military pomp and ceremony of this 69 year old school established by the late General William Verbeck, Japanese born American. Colonel Guido F. Vesbeck, headmaster presented the diplomas.

An outsanding event on this commencement program was the introduction of Mrs. William Verbeck as a commander of the Phoenix, the decoration being given by her eldest son, present headmaster. The day marked the 50th anniversary of the arrival of the General and Mrs. Verbeck at the school from abroad.

The commencement address was given by Dr. Kenneth Chorley '08, president of Colonial Williamsburg Inc., and director of the Rockefeller restoration of this famous Virginia village.
